Dear Lisa...

As advised, I am sending this certified mail...you can either refuse it or accept it...but it serves to show that you are aware of this judgment, and my tax person told me that I needed a W-9 which I sent earlier and you ignored, so said it must be sent certified so there was a record of acceptance or rejection.

I am struggling with why on earth you would think it is O.K. to basically steal $5,000 from me. You obviously run a horse business and belong to many organizations, so I would think that your reputation and honesty would be something you took pride in. Throughout the summer you told me repeatedly that you were sending money, so obviously you are aware that you owed it to me. Facing all the garbage of taking someone to court was not really fun, and came with definite expenses...and that also is frustrating that you do not honor a court issued demand to pay. This leaves me only one solution and that is to hire a collection agency....and I am able to add interest and all of the costs of collection on to your judgment. It sort of seems like your amount due will only increase.

Lisa, I have never met you, but I trusted you with a contract that you wrote and guaranteed...you obviously are breeding more and more horses, training more and more horses, and collecting more and more horses...so just human to human, why are you doing that, and is it your nature to disregard contracts and money paid to you?...I am just a person, like you, loves horses, wanted my dream horse. I believe in what people tell me, and generally am good with a handshake for deals...I am not a vindictive or nasty person...but your total disregard for ME and my belief that you would do what is right just gnaws on me all day and night and I have to have a resolution...

Anyway...would really appreciate it if you would send me the amount of the judgment...If not, I guess I have to do what I have to do.

Best:

Janet Sally
